Beijing Puts New Controls On Practice Of Religion

Rules Ban Proselytizing By Foreigners and Curb Activities of Churches

Compiled by Our Staff From Disparches BELIING -- In a new crackdown on religion. China on Sunday banned proselytizing by for-eigners and forbade churches to engage in what it called destructive, independent, unautho-nised or overseas-financed activities.

Two cabinet decrees signed into law by Prime Minister Li Peng sharply increased state controls on Chinese and foreign religious adherents. The decrees, signed on Jan. 31, took effect upon publication on Sunday in Legal Deily.

The measures come at a sensitive time for China, which is under pressure from the United States to show improvement in its human rights to preserve tariff advantages under most-favored-nation trading status.

Beijing also wants to gain diplomatic recognition from the Varican and hopes for a visit by Foreign evangelists distributing Bibles and religious materials have long been a target of Chinese security officers. And riots sparked by foreign-published books deemed offensive by China's Muslim minority have alarmed the authorities.

Although freedom of religion is guaranteed by the constitution, the Communist government has waged a constant campaign to prevent the spreading of all faiths and to limit contacts between domestic and foreign religious organizations

Well aware of the important role played by the church in the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe, the Chinese authorities have increased religious repression — including for-ture and detention of believers — since early 1992, according to international human rights

Analysts said the new crackdown reflected party concern that state-sanctioned religious institutions — China's official Buddhist, Daoist, Protestant, Roman Catholic and Islamic churches - were losing their grip on the China repressed religions long before the Communists took power in 1949. Foreign missionaries were seen for centuries as agents of Western imperialism and insurrection It was only after the Cultural Resolution seeing in 1976 that official churches were allowed to reopen, provided they acted as "patriotic" boosters of communism, free of foreign infuhold private services for themselves only. Foreigners "must not establish religious organizations, organs for managing religious af-fairs or centers or schools for religious activity," said Order No. 144, entitled "Rules for man-agement of foreigners' religious activities."

They are forbidden to recruit religious followers, appoint religious teachers or conduct any other proselytizing activities among the Chinese people," it said.

Foreigners may preach in China only with provincial or central government approval. Vi-olators face unspecified punishment, it said.

Onder No. 145 bans underground "house" churches and other unauthorized places of worship, which have spread across China in recent years, it also puts strict limits on what goes on inside churches, which in many cases have been accused of harboring political dissidents and even fomenting insurrection.

In 1992, officials put the number of Protestants and Catholics attending state approved churches at about 8 million and growing by a million each year, while acknowledging that the number of "secret" worshippers was far higher. (Reiners, AFP)

UN Says It Isn't Certain Who Fired Fatal Round

By John Pomfret

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina -United Nations officials said Sunday that they had no conclusive evidence that the 120mm mortar round that crashed into the middle of the Old Town's market here, killing 68 people, was fired by the Bosnian Serbs.

But the new British commander of UN forces in Bosnia, Lieutenant General Sir Michael Rose, also said he had seen no proof to support Bosnian Serb claims that Muslim forces had killed their own people - in Saturday's calamity or in previous ones.

"The world will draw its own conclusions," General Rose said, observing that the mortar round "did exactly the same damage" as another volley fired Friday afternoon at a line of people waiting for food. UN officials blamed Serbs for that blast, which left at least eight dead.

Three United States planes evacuated about 60 of the wounded victims on Sunday. as well as 120 relatives, to Ramstein in Germany for treatment.

An International Red Cross transport plane carrying wounded and family members from Sarajevo arrived at the U.S. air base in Ramstein at 7:50 Sunday night, an American military spokesman said, He said two U.S. C-130 transport planes were expected shortly afterward, carrying a total of 43 wounded including 34 with very serious injuries, and 79 members of their families.

The confusion over responsibility for Saturday's attack, in which the mortar plowed through a thin green corrugated roof onto a hawker's table in this crumbling city's openair market, appeared destined to muddy ef-forts within the international community to punish Bosnian Serb forces, who are largely seen as the aggressors in the war.

Several UN officials said they believed the United Nations was shying away from blam-ing the Serbs because of the possibility that such a step would spark military retaliation, a path many in the UN hierarchy — both here and in the UN headonarters for the former Yugoslavia in Zagreb, Croatia - oppose,

Brigadier General Charles Ritchie of the British Army, who is chief of staff of the UN operation in the former Yugoslavia, rejected that idea. He said results of a crater analysis determined that the shell was fired from a gun 1,830 meters (2,000 yards) to 3,200 meters away, "a range bracket that straddles both sides."

General Ritchie said the fact that the shell fell through a thin tin roof and landed first on a table before it bore a hole into the pavement complicated the cruter analysis, which re-quires an unimpeded impact for best results. He said the high death toll occurred because the shell exploded on the hawker's table and not on the ground.

"When it hit the table with a percussion head, it exploded on contact, spraying shrapnel chest and head high." the former army mortar officer said. "That's why the effect was so unterly disastrous.

U.S. Foreign Policy Tug-of-War: Idealism vs. Profits

By Thomas L. Friedman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The raging arguments over relations with Vietnam and China are at the core of a sharpening debate in American foreign policy. In a world where every nation's motto is now "Export or Die," where should the United States draw the line between its desire to export its values and its increasing requirement to export its goods?

During the Cold War, the main debate was between idealists who argued that relations with other countries should depend on their human-rights records and realists who argued that America could not afford militarily to isolate dictatorships in such places as the Philippines or Iran because their support was needed against Moscow.

Today, the idealists are still advocating imman rights. But increasingly they are finding themselves debating not with hawkish generals, but with General Electric Co. and General Motors Corp., who argue that the United States cannot afford economically to isolate the fastest growing economies, like those in China and

There are still security considerations, but increasingly the thrust of the debate in foreign policy today is economics versus human

HAVANA - A series of once unthinkable high-risk economic reforms, coupled with favorable world prices for key commodities, are improving Cuba's devastated economy and rapidly transforming the face of the Western Hemisphere's last bastion of Marxism.

In the last six months, the government of Fidel Castro not only has allowed Cubans to use U.S. dollars openly, but also has permitted limited self-employment and has increased agricultural production by giving farmers a direct stake in productivity. In addition, a growing number of foreign joint ventures and a robust tourism industry are opening Cuba to market

At the same time, world oil prices have dropped sharply and the price of sugar, Cuba's main export for hard currency, has climbed, allowing scarce resources to go further.

Although no one is predicting a rapid revival. and the economy, which has been subject to a suiff 33-year U.S. trade embargo, is suil far from healthy, Cuban leaders, for the first time since communism in Eastern Europe collapsed in 1989, say that the economic free fall has ended.

In both this capital and the countryside, there is a visible lessening of economic pressure and a growth of private enterprises. Because the reform measures have not been fully defined and the limits not set, much of the economic activity is taking place in a sort of gray market of shifting boundaries, in which the dollar is the "Susan's strength is that she is not a rigid ideologue," says Eliot L. Engel, a Democratic congressman from New York City. She is approachable on a range of issues that do not always fit the Republican Party line, he said, and thus she could appeal to voters who see themselves as Democrats.

She also gains leverage from the considerable political clout of her father, Guy Molinari, a savvy New York Republican who effectively willed his congressional seat to his only child. The couple will set up house in Washington and fly to their respective districts on weekends. Both want children, and both insist that life will not change substantially from its current pattern.

Safety Milestone on Big U.S. Airlines

WASHINGTON (AP) — Accidents involving major U.S. airlines claimed only one life in 1993, a government board reported. The major airlines were involved in 23 accidents, but the only death involved a member of a ground crew who was struck by a propeller. The National Transportation Safety Board said the fatal-accident rate among the major rlines was the lowest since 1980, when no deaths were reported.

Charter airlines reported no deaths for the fourth straight year and the number of deaths on air taxis was 42, down from 70 in 1992, preliminary figures showed. The only increase was on commuter airlines, where 24, people were killed in 1993, compared with 21 in 1992. Overall, the board reported, 800 people died in 2,158 accidents involving nonmilitary and nongovernment planes. In 1992, 998 were killed in 2,221 accidents.

Israel, seeking to increase its number of visitors, will allow foreign airlines operating in the country to raise the number of their regularly, scheduled flights by 60 percent and charter operators to increase flights by 25 percent, government officials said. THE AMERICAS / CIVIL RIGHTS MELESTONE

Byron De La Beckwith arriving at court in Jackson, Mississippi. He was sentenced to life in prison.

30 Years Later, a Murder Conviction

By Ronald Smothers New York Tunes Service

JACKSON, Mississippi - The white supremacist who witnesses said bragged about killing Medgar Evers three decades ago has finally been convicted of murder. He was immediately sentenced to life in prison.

Byron De La Beckwith, 73, had avoided conviction in two previous trials in 1964, when all-white juries deadlocked. But this time, nearly 31 years after Mr. Evers, the black civil-rights leader, was shot and killed outside his home near here, a jury of eight blacks and four whites delivered a unanimous verdict of guilty after only six hours of deliberation.

The verdict Saturday closed an enduring chapter in a case that has been part of the civil-rights lore of the South, emblematic of the violence and injustice that accompanied the drive to topple segregation.

Mr. Evers, the Mississippi field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, or NAACP, became one of the best-known martyrs for the cause, and his death had helped galvanized wide support in the North for the drive to secure civil rights for blacks in the south.

When word of the verdict spread, cries of joy echoed in the hallways outside the courtroom in the Hinds County Courthouse. But Mr. Beckwith showed no emotion.

After the verdict was announced, the judge called Mr. Beckwith to the bench.

"By the mandate of the law, it is mandated that I sentence you to a term of life in prison," Judge L. Breland Hilburn said.

Mr. Beckwith's wife, Thelma, shrieked and sobbed loudly after her husband left the room.

Outside, Myrlie Evers, the widow of the victim, stood before reporters and warned that she was about to throw off the veil of composure that she had worn throughout the trial. She then broke into a smile, loudly shouted a cheer and raised a clenched fist to the sky in triumph. "My God, I don't have to say accused assas-

Until a decision is made on an appeal, Mr. Beckwith will be held in the Hinds County Jail. He will be segregated from other inmates.

Under Mississippi's sentencing guidelines, Mr. Beckwith will have to serve a minimum of 10 years before being eligible for parole.

Bobby DeLaughter, an assistant to Ed Peters, the Hinds County district attorney, said that the key to their success in this case was the six witnesses who testified that they had heard Mr. Beckwith brag about killing Mr. Evers.

Among those, he said, the most telling was Mark Reiley, a 32-year-old former guard in a hospital prison ward in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, who upon seeing a television account of the trial of Mr. Beckwith two weeks ago, called the prosecutors to give them an additional and powerful account of such bragging.

Mr. Reilev guarded Mr. Beckwith in 1979, when Mr. Beckwith was in prison after a police search of his car turned up weapons and a map marking the home of the head of New Orleans Anti-Delamation League.

He said Mr. Beckwith took a liking to him and bragged about "killing that uppity nigger Medgar Evers" and about the influence he had in Mississippi that protected him from being Thirty years ago. Mr. Beckwith took the stand in his defense, not only denying that he had killed Mr. Evers as he got out of the car in front of his home around midnight on June 12, 1963, but also to proclaim his segregationist opinions. This time, Mr. Beckwith, once known for his volubility, went through much of the trial without drawing attention to himself.

U.S. Backs Security Agencies On Codes

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The Clinton administration has rejected the arguments of the computer industry and civil libertarians and sided with national security agencies that seek to guarantee their ability to intercept and decode messages sent over computer and telephone lines.

The White House had agreed to review initiatives, begun during the Bush admin-istration and pursued under President Bill Clinton, that favored the FBI and the National Security Agency in their efforts to ensure that the agencies can continue to read and listen despite rapidly evolving encryption technologies.

Help on Way for 'Structurally' Unemployed

MUNICH - The new United Sties defense secretary, William J. Perry, pledged support on Sunday for Russian reforms but said NATO would defend member states if "a new nightmare of the dark" rose from the ruins of the old

In his first policy speech as de-fense secretary, Mr. Perry told the Munich Conference on Security that he shared the concern of European leaders over the fate of fledg-ing Russian reforms and the possible resurgence of an imperial Russia seeking to regain neighboring territories.

Last week Chancellor Helmut Kohl supported the White House position on the partition plan, saying that no party should be essured into signing on. Mr. Clinton has made clear his willingness to participate in air strikes, which presumably would involve American warplanes stationed in Italy or on aircraft carriers in the Adriatic. But the main White House push should be to lift the senseless arms embargo. It should also support trade sanctions against Croatia unless Croatian troops are withdrawn from Bosnia in double-quick time. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Opening Up to Vietnam

The trade embargo had come to represent the last self-imposed restraint on renewal of American relations with Communist Vietnam. Ostensibly, the embargo had been kept on strictly to ensure Vietnamese cooperation in searching for Americans still regarded as missing in the Vietnam War, which ended for the United States in 1975. But unquestionably Americans needed time to come to terms with a conflict that had taken 58,000 American lives, convulsed American politics and society and ended in an unprecedented American defeat. The reclaiming of a vestigial honor was rightly seen to lie in a due respect for the MIAs. Vietnam played on this American preoccupation in the bargaining, delaying for years the lifting of the embargo that President Bill Clinton announced the other day.

As men of the right, Ronald Reagan or George Bush could easily have taken this major step toward normalization, had the MIA and Cambodia issues been ripe. But as one who opposed the war in his student days and avoided military service, Bill Clinton needed an even larger showing of Vietnamese cooperation. It took him a year, but he got it, last year in Cambodia, where Hanoi supported a peaceful denouement, and now with the MIAs, where he promises to keep looking. Mr. Clinton also needed, and got, a full measure of support across the political spectrum at home. A president who premises his whole foreign policy on adjusting to the global economy said he had refused trade briefings so as to emphasize the exclusion of trade considerations from his embargo decision. But of course there are trade considerations. Vietnam's ardent interest in the economic openings to which only Washington has the key provided crucial leverage. Vietnam is poor, still unrecovered from its war wounds and shackled by a system of lingering central planning. However, it has a large population (70 million) whose energies many Americans came to respect in the war. Expectations of quick and fancy profits court disappointment, but business opportunities do exist, plus opportunities for regional ac-commodation. On its part, Hanoi is especially eager to enlist the American strategic weight against its traditional rival, China.

As things go along, some Americans will be drawn to explore common human ground with the former foe. Many, we hope, will try to see to a widening of the tiny space now available in Communist Vietnam for human rights. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Stew of Hate

Religious and racial bigotry never recede entirely, witness the ebb and flow of Klan membership in the past century. Over a much shorter historical cycle, the candidly racist Nation of Islam has waxed and contracted in the 60 years since Elijah Poole, son of a Georgia preacher, changed his name to Elijah Muhammad and took over leadership of the sect.

Starting in the days when they were known in the white press as the Black Muslims, the group has posed problems for mainstream civil rights organizations. Martin Luther King Jr. criticized their espousal of violence, but he couched that criticism carefully for fear disrupting black political solidarity.

Throughout the years, whites have repeatedly challenged officeholders and Christian ministers in the black community to repudiate the Nation of Islam. Black leaders have often responded that while they do not share the group's philosophy they also understand, with sympathy, that it is rooted in the rage produced by two centuries of oppression. Why, they ask, should the Congressional Black Caucus repudiate this group when the white Southern Democrats in Congress never got around to denouncing George Wallace, Lester Maddox and Ross Barnett? It is also fair to point out that while the Senate denounced Louis Farrakhan, minister of the Nation of Islam, by a 97-to-0 vote, there was no stampede to discipline Senator Ernest Hollings for telling a racist joke about African diplomats.

The one thing that America's collective experience with racism has shown is that it cannot be conquered with tit-for-tat grievance counting. Jesse Jackson is right when he calls for an end to the "rhetoric war." What is needed is an astringently intellectual, morally grounded repudiation of bigotry whenever it occurs and from whatever source. The response must be all the more thorough when the racism is systematized around fictional ideas like Mr. Farrakhan's pseudo history that casts Jews as America's main slaveholders. This is anti-Semitism raised to a psychotic level. Several millennia have taught Jews about the dangers of being scapegoated. They know that psychotic hatred can transmute into government policy with frightening speed. That is why blacks and non-Jewish whites may not fully understand Jewish concern when a handful of college students respond Iavorably to the obviously wacky hate-mongering of Mr. Farrakhan and his mouthpiece, Khalid Abdul Muhammad.

Mr. Farrakhan's phony "discipline" of Mr. sentative Charles Rangel's unworthy argument that the Anti-Defamation League had elevated Mr. Muhammad by exposing him. For Mr. Farrakhan to say that Mr. Muhammad is being demoted because he used internperate language to express "truths" about Jews is to deliver insult rather than apology. Representative Kweisi Mfume of Maryland, head of the Congressional Black Cancus, properly disowned his ill-advised "sacred covenant" with the Nation of Islam. He should also renounce, root and branch, Mr. Farrakhan's anti-white, anti-Semitic, anti-Catholic, anti-gay

message, as should Mr. Jackson and Benjamin

Chavis, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In return, black organizations and leaders have a right to ask for heightened white sensitivity to the commonplace discrimination of everyday life and to the increasing tolerance for parlor - and campus - prejudice against blacks. The nation is far removed from the national teach-in on race that occurred during the 1950s and '60s. To spread that experience to new generations, Mr. Jackson has called for a White House conference on racial and gender equality and religious tolerance. Such a gathering could lift Americans above the current fencing over whether denunciations have been fast and frequent enough to a new dialogue about bigotry. Thirty-five years ago, Ralph McGill warned against the evil stew created when the racial dialogue is left to "hate-filled minds." He was denouncing white Klansmen who claimed the sanction of history to bomb a synagogue in Atlanta. The anti-Semitic ravings of the Nation of Islam leaders, under the sanction of distorted religion, represent the same kind of threat.

Cynthia Tucker, the forceful black woman who now occupies Mr. McGill's chair as editorial page editor of The Atlanta Constitution, observed on Friday that while skilled hatemongers are always too smart to commit crimes, they incite lesser minds to act out the violence implicit in their words. She warned, "When the wolves of hate are loosed on one people, then no one is safe."

Gambling on the IRA

The rationale for President Clinton's decision to let IRA spokesman Gerry Adams into the country was that such recognition is neces-sary to allow Mr. Adams and the IRA to bring themselves to cease fire and participate in the reconciliation scenario to which the Irish and British governments agreed. Whether Mr. Clinton was right to reverse 19 years of U.S. policy, infuriate America's most steadfast ally and overrule the CIA and State Department depends entirely on whether the IRA calls a permanent cease-fire soon.

Herald Tribune. Stop Pretending the Chinese Gulag Isn't Really There

S TANFORD, California — The fear, horror and brutality that movie audiences see depicted in "Schindler's List" are daily fare in China's forced-labor prison camps, the world's largest instrument of political repression. More than 10 million people remain in their grip.

While Beijing needs the hard currency that comes from preferred trade status, it seems more deeply interested in keeping the truth about the gulag from the world. Despite reams of contradictory documentation, it denies that exports products made by forced labor. When Bill Clinton decides in June on renew-when still clinton decides in June on renewing most-favored status for China, one criterion will be Beijing's compliance with a U.S.-Chinese accord that prohibits the importation of products made by convicts, whether through forced labor or not. Lacking real teeth, the accord is worthliess. U.S. officials have requested five visits to camps, and only one, which took place last month, has been permitted. It is not yet clear whether the camp had been sanitized to eliminate any indications of forced labor.

I was arbitrarily thrown into the camps in 1960 without a trial, and spent 19 years in them. was just a student, not an activist, but was labeled a "counterrevolutionary rightist" in 1957 in a political campaign handled for Mao Zedong by Deng Xiaoping, the current supreme By Harry Wu

I learned that the only way to survive was to become inhuman - not to think, not to feel. I was repeatedly tortured and nearly died from starvation and exposure to freezing tempera-tures. I are anything I could find, learning to eatch and devour frogs, snakes and rats.

My family disowned me so that they would not be further persecuted by the government, to this day, I cannot speak with family members in China for fear that they will be harmed.

I was released in 1979 and came to America in 1985. In writing my memoirs, I realized that I was speaking for the millions of ordinary people who died in the camps and remain nameless, faceless, unknown to the outside world. They are gone, but they must not be forgotten, and those who still labor under these brutal conditions must be defended.

These ordinary people, among them workers and religious believers, are still locked away as political prisoners, along with common crimiils; they are forced to work or starve, a practice that violates international law and basic decency.

The camps and their victims have not been given adequate attention by the American government and people. Americans remain outraged over the Nazis' forced labor camps and Stalin's. Why haven't the American people and world leaders, President Clinton among them, condemned the camps? A few political prisoners have been freed. In the next few months Beijing no doubt will let a few prominent dissidents out as a sop to Mr. Clinton. The administration recently announced that U.S. officials would be allowed to take guided tours of a few camps, but these surely will be model camps — Potenkin villages. Beijing and the International Committee of the Red Cross are discussing Red Cross visits to camps. But remember, in the 1930s Hitler let the Red Cross into concentration camps and it

Everyone knows that communism is dead in China. But the Communism don't want to give up power. In the end, China will develop real democracy only through domestic and inter-

The U.S. State Department's yearly human rights review found that China's record in 1993 "fell far short of internationally accepted norms as it continued to repress domestic critics and failed to control abuses by its own security forces."

Recognizing this truth about China's failure to make significant strides in human rights, America must help China's brave and suffering millions by cutting off most-favored-na-tion treatment this year. Mr. Chaton should send a clear message that repression in the gulags will not be rewarded.

Yes to an American Role in Peacekeeping, but With Conditions

WASHINGTON — The debate over United Nations peace-keeping is healthy, for peace-keeping involves American resources and prestige and can involve American lives. The rise of regional and internal conflicts poses difficult issues: What obligations does the international community have in such conflicts? What U.S. role is consistent with U.S. interests? The administration has completed a policy review that will help ensure that our peacekeeping ef-forts are selective and more effective.

Peacekeeping has served U.S. interests in Cyprus, Sinai, El Salvador, Cambodia and elsewhere. It can advance our interests and foreign policy goals by dampening conflicts that hreaten allies, giving breathing room to fledgling democracies and provid-ing equitable sharing of burdens. More than 90 percent of United Nations peacekeeping troops come from other countries; almost 70 percent of the cost is borne by others. Unfortunately, there have been many problems with UN peacekeeping.

Let us be clear: Peacekeeping is not at the center of our foreign or defense policy. Our armed forces' primary mission is not to conduct peace operations but to win wars. The bottom-up review of our post-Cold War defense requirements ensures that we remain prepared to do that.

We will never compromise military readiness to support peacekeeping. Nor would we hesitate to end our engagement in a peace operation if that were necessary to concentrate our forces against an adversary in a major conflict.
This administration has no intention of transferring troops into a standing world army. There may be occasions when the president determines it is in our interest to place U.S. personnel under temporary foreign operational control, as in NATO and Desert Storm. But the president will never relinquish his constitutional command authority over U.S. troops. The fear that the administration would subcontract its foreign policy to any power or person is unrealistic. So is the notion that we should abandon peacekeeping altogether.

The administration will continue and expand regular consultations with Congress on all aspects of our peacekeeping policy and will discuss with the Congress ways of working together when there are possible de-ployments of U.S. military units in UN peace operations.

There are four main elements to our policy. First, we are asking tough questions before voting for a peace operation at the United Nations and will ask even tougher ones before we involve U.S. forces. What is the threat to our interests? Is there a clearly defined mission? A distinct end point? How much will it cost? Are the resources available? What is the likelihood of success? As the president said at the United Nations, we have begun asking such questions before voting in the Security Council. Second, we will work with the other UN members to establish a more equitable sharing of peace operations' costs. Our current share, more than 30 percent, results from a formula set in 1973. The world has changed, and we want to reduce our share to 25 percent.

Third, we and other UN members are working to bring modern managent and financial accountability to UN peace operations, There is no doubt that the United Nations is overextended. We have proposed extensive reforms, including the creation of a modern communications center and logistics support system, that will enable the United Nations to plan and carry out peace operations effectively. Fourth, we will outline a new division of responsibility for peace operations between the State and Defense departments. (The Pentagon would have primary management and financial responsibility for UN operations that are likely to involve combat.) And while we will not designate separate peacekeeping troops, we will ensure that our forces receive appro-priate training for peace operations. We are realistic about the limits of peacekeeping. As we see in Somalia, peacekeepers can create an opportunity for peace, but the responsibility for the future of a society must always rest with its own people. Can the United Nations build nations for others? No. Can we let the United Nations become a dumping ground for conflicts that the warning parties themselves lack the will to resolve? No.

and the second

Do UN peace operations always benefit the American people? No. Should we then throw away an often useful foreign policy tool in a fit of frustration? Of course not.

This year, as we have advanced our major foreign policy goals — promoting open markets, renewing our security, supporting democracy — we have acted alone when necessary. But at times working with UN peace-keepers is what works best. When that is the case, we will be committed to getting the job done right. The New York Times.

Read All About It — Good Old Brits vs. the Wicked Continent

BRUSSELS — Everyone in Brussels knows that Britain is in the European doghouse. Margaret Thatcher used to spit and snarl. John Major likens the European aim of monetary union to a rain dance, presumably of an African tribe. And this has consequences.

Although London is without question the biggest financial market in Europe, the Eu-ropean central bank is to be in Frankfurt. When Jacques Delors goes at the end of this year, the commissioner best qualified to sucs president is Brittan. Few in Brussels believe that he will get the job. When Brits come up for promotion in the Commission, they are looked at askance. "Are they one of us?" the Continentals, not unreasonably, ask.

An industrialist, who runs the Belgian subsidiary of a major multinational, told me not long ago that his people went along regularly to ask the Commission about its future plans. Anytime someone asked how the British would react, the answer would be. "Why bother about them — they're halfway out of Europe already."

A major reason for this state of affairs is never mentioned in the British press. This is By Roy Denman because the British press is a major reason. More than 80 percent of the daily newspaper circulation in Britain consists of tabloids. Since the national educational system was restructured to satisfy the egalitarian desires of the Labor Party of the 1960s, the market is semi-literate. Words of more than two syllables are shunned. The themes are sports, sex, the royal family and an almost

The headline "Up Yours Delors" is well known. Less well known is another, from the day when a statue of Air Marshal Sir Arthur "Bomber" Harris was unveiled by the Queen Mother. Not surprisingly, some German tour-ists mildly booed. "Hun Scum Boo Queen Mum," thundered The Sun. Britain is not the only European country to have tabloids, but it has more of them and they are more virulently anti-European.

Of the daily broadsheets, two foreign absentee landlords control more than half the circulation. They both detest the European Union, and their editorial staffs have pandered slavishly to this whim. Facts are never allowed to get in the way of a good story ridiculing snything which goes on among the Wogs south of the Channel. During the Danish debate on the Masstricht referendum, much was made of a Commission regulation setting out the curves required in cucumbers for packaging. No one mentioned that this regulation had been drafted by the Commission and then approved by the 12 member states at the request of the Danish government, responding in turn to a request from Danish cucumits. Unde of the British coi dents in Brussels says openly that the standing instruction from his editor is "Send knocking copy." Things are not much better in the other broadsheets. Firmly fixed in the minds of most of their editorial writers is the doctrine of PEWFAA — Protectionist Europe, Wicked French and Angelic Americans. Why one can hear the constant question over the scratching of their pens - have decent fellows like the Brits got entangled with this Continental lot, with their crazy Common Agricultural Policy, and the wicked French always dreaming up more knavish protec-tionist tricks? If only we could have allied ourselves with the Americans, to whom subsidies and indeed any trade-distorting practice are as foreign as sin to a newborn child. No one dares to mention that on agricul-ture any French government faces a million farmers. In Britain, 50,000 coal miners hu-miliatingly propelled a British government into economic loonyland.

No one chooses to mention that the United States gives subsidies on a major scale to its dairy farmers, that its restrictions on sugar imports damage poor countries in the Caribthe United States, and that agricultural production in the western third of the United States would hardly be possible without a massive federal irrigation subsidy.

This daily portrayal of fantasyland has its effect. It divides Britain from the Continent. It damages British interests there. And it inevitably distorts the view which the world superpower has of Europe. Americans need to realize that most of the British press, for diverse and not very respectable reasons, chooses to depict Europe as the land of the Wizard of Oz, with John Major as Dorothy and Jacques Delors as the Wicked Witch. International Herald Tribune.

In This Caricature of America, Everybody Skates Away Scot-Free

T OKYO — All over Asia, people are completely fascinated with the U.S. Olympic figure skating scandal. This is parily due to the powerful melodramatic pull of a real-life mys-tery story amid the glamour of world-class sport. Beyond that, though, the Tonya Harding case has proved irresistible because it seems to confirm all the worst stereotypes that people overseas love to hold about America.

Viewed through the prism of the feisty Asian sports newspapers never reticent about reporting on the darker side of U.S. society — the assault-on-ice is just another example of modern-day America at work: a country where the concept of fair play lost out long ago to sheer greed; a country where violence emerges as the solution to every problem; a country where even an ice skater nowadays dare not go anywhere without a pair of burly bodyguards and a battalion of lawyers.

Lately, the overseas image of America, drawn from a number of recent trials, has locused on the idea that it is a place where you can do whatever you want — and get away with it. You can kill your parents while they are eating ice cream in front of the television set. You can ravage your wife. You can maim your husband. You can pull out a gun big enough to kill a grizzly bear and blow the life out of an innocent 16-yearold foreign exchange student who rings your doorbell on Halloween. You can do any of those things and then find an American jury that will let you get away with it.

For the most part, this is a protesque parody of the United States, probably inspired in large part by resentment and jealousy of a country that now stands as the military, economic and cultural colossus of the world. But that dangerous, decadent

America — a courty where no had deed goes punished — is the America that the foreign media love to portray. And if Tonya Harding gets to represent America on the U.S. Olympia than the pull of the U.S. Olympia the U.S. Oly pic team, she will go to Norway as the personification of that America. Like other world-class skaters, Tonya Harding devoted huge chunks of her life to the hard work of perfecting her skills. With dedication and diligence, she overcame personal and athletic difficulties. She developed a style that combines agility and power to a degree that few skaters anywhere can match. If it stopped there, Americans could be proud to have her represent them in Norway.

But Miss Harding also developed an acute sense of victimhood. If anything went wrong, it was somebody else's fault. She was always being cheated. She made that point over and over in interviews, and it came through loud and clear to the muga and ex-cons she surrounded herself with. Much like Henry II ("Who will free me from this turbulent priest?"), she set the train of violence in mo-tion, then denied responsibility when those around her took the hint

To some foreign media, that flight from responsibility is the most American thing about the whole sordid business. "The Tonya Harding case helps us to understand," a reporter on Japan's TBS-TV network declared breathlessly one night last week, "what a big difference there is between the United States and Japan in the concept of personal responsibility."

The Japanese cannot resist comparing Miss Harding to their own favorite skater, Midori Ito, who was Asia's greatest hope at the 1992 Windows Miss Harding ter Olympics. Like Miss Harding, Miss Ito is a muscular, dynamic skater better known for athletic prowess than lithesome grace. Like Miss Har-ding she mastered the triple axel, hoping that it would be her ace against taller, more elegant competitors.

While her whole nation watched with bated breath, Miss Ito launched an all-out drive at Albertville for the gold medal. In her final program she tried not just one but two triple axels; she nit one perfectly and missed the other. The effort proved good enough to edge past one American competitor — a graceful brunette named Nancy Kerrigan — but she still ended up in second place, behind America's Kristi Yamaguchi. When the medals were awarded, Miss Ito stepped before the cameras to speak to the television audience back home. She gave her countrymen a deep, apologetic bow, "I humbly apologize," she said, "It was my fault.

Compare that with Tonya Harding's regular chorus of "I wuz robbed!" when things don't go her Tonya Harding's team got an unway, and you can see why Japan be-lieves there is a "big difference" when it comes to personal responsibility. In fact, one of the big differences at work is determining the level of responsibility that Miss Harding should be held to Many Americans. judging from opinion polls, have de-cided that she should be entitled to a spot on the U.S. team unless she meets the criminal definition of responsibility. That is, unless she is proved guilty of something covered by the criminal law, she is innocent enough to represent the United States in the Olympics.

"Innocent until proven guilty" is one of the majestic glories of Ameri-can jurisprudence. Enshrined in law by men who knew the terrors of the Star Chamber and the royal bill of attainder, it was designed to protect an individual's liberty and property against the unjust whims of govern-mental power. But this minimal standard was not designed to confer hon-or, privilege or the right to represent the United States on the world stage. "Not yet indicted" may be the appro-priate criterion for deciding whether somebody ought to be in jail, but the picking of America's Olympians has traditionally involved something more than this bottom-of-the-barrel test.

The Olympics involves concepts like teamwork, fairness and responsibility. Figure skating is called an "individttal" sport, but at the Olympic level it is anything but. Any world-class skater has a team of coaches, assistant coaches, choreographers, costume designers, media advisers, managers and even, God forbid, bodyguards. The skater is the head of the team, and if the team wins, the skater quite fairly gets the credit. By the same token, if the team cheats, as Miss Harding's team did, it seems only fair that the skater should bear the responsibility.

If an athlete is given an unfair advantage over her competitors, that is normally enough to keep her out of the game. When they give those ran-dom drug tests at the Olympics, no-body asks whether the athlete knowingly took the drugs. If you have an unfair advantage because of steroids, you're out - even if you insist that you didn't know what your coach was stirring into the oatmeal.

fair advantage in a reprehensible way — through deliberate violence against a competitor. She knew about it — at least after the fact and hed to cover it up. Now some people argue that this is irrelevant unless it can be proved beyond a shadow of doubt that Miss

Harding knew beforehand the dirty tricks her team employed to help her win. Whether or not she had "prior knowledge" may make a difference to a grand jury. In Olympic terms that is, in terms of sportsmanship—the point is irrelevant. The sophisticated New York liberals who sat around the bar at Elaine's and decided that Tonya Harding should be the object of their sympathy are really saying that folks who live in trailer camps in Oregon don't understand concepts like honesty and sportsmanship. She's only a poor say, so you shouldn't expect her to play fair, to tell the truth to the FBL, or to express regret about a fellow skater's misfortune. In fact, most people in Oregon, like most other Americans, understand perfectly well what fair play is all about. The scores of ordinary work-ing-class Americans who will represent their country at the Olympics this month are people who have lived all their lives following the rules, telling the truth, and accepting responsi-bility for their own actions.

But if Tonya Harding is permitted to wear the uniform with the Ameri-can flag at Lillehammer, the foreign press will pay no attention to all those sportsmen from the United States. For the world's media, the only American at the Olympics will be the one who seems to stand for the notion that in modern-day America you can do any-thing — and skate away scot-free.

Paris Seeks NATO Ultimatum: Lift Siege or Face Air Strikes

By Roger Cohen

PARIS — France said Sunday that an emergency NATO meeting on Bosnia would be held within the next 48 hours and that it should set an ultimatum: Lift the siege of Sarajevo or face the military power of the Western alliance.

Amid a chorus of horror and indignation from European leaders over the mortar-shell attack on Saturday on the main Sarajevo mar-ket, which killed at least 68 people, Foreign Minister Alain Juppé said Serbian forces ringing the Bosnian capital must be withdrawn to at least 30 kilometers (18 miles) and all heavy arms of the belligerents handed over to UN troops.

"If these two demands are not met," said Mr. Juppe, who was flanked by Defense Minister Fran-çois Leotard, "then all means, including air power, must he deto ensure they are." He declined to say how much time the ultimatum should allow.

Foreign Ministry officials said Mr. Juppe had spoken three times to the U.S. secretary of state, Warren M. Christopher, over the week-end, and the Western response to the mortar attack, the worst single attack of the 22-month Bosnian civil war, was being closely coordinated between European governments and Washington.

Defense Aide for Finnish Presidency

By Lee Hockstader

Washington Post Service
HELSINKI — A diplomat with no experience in domestic politics won the Finnish presidency Sunday, capitalizing on voter disen--chantment with traditional politicians and a struggling economy.

With 99 percent of the ballots counted, Martti Ahtisaari, a 56year-old Social Democrat, had received 53.8 percent of the vote to defeat Defense Minister Elisabeth Rehn, who had 46.2 percent in the rumoff election. About 82 percent of the Finnish electorate voted.

Mr. Ahtisaari is a seasoned dip-lomat who has held high positions at the United Nations, including undersecretary-general for administration and management. At the UN, he was best known for over-seeing Namibia's transition to independence from South Africa in 1990. But he had never run for public office at home and was not a well-known figure in Finnish poli-tics when he declared his candidacy for president last March.

Nonetheless, in first-round voting last month he placed first in a field of 11 candidates, besting politicians who are longtime fixtures in Finnish politics. Mrs. Rehn placed second in the Jan. 16 ballot, which led to the runoff Sunday.

Analysts said that Mr. Ahtisaari's sudden popularity owed much to the sharp recession that hit much to the snarp recession that int Finland's economy in 1991, largely as a result of the collapse of trading ties with the former Soviet Union and the aftershock of a spending advantage in the late stages of the campaign, saying he would appeal to the government to spend more to reduce unemployment.

Under Finland's constitution, the president has some influence but little actual control over economic questions. His real power is in the field of foreign affairs, which also happens to be Mr. Ahtisaari's area of strength.

He is a strong supporter of Fin-land's application to join the European Union a move that would the Europe's Such a move would have been untlinkable during the Cold War, when Finland avoided any alignments that would provoke Mrs. Rehn, the 58-year-old defense minister, also supported EU membership. She was seen as slightly more conservative on fiscal matters, but in most respects the two candidates were not regarded as far apart on the issues.

A member of Finland's small thnically Swedish minority, Mrs. Rehn was supported by many young people and professionals, who saw her as a competent professional and a fresh face who would represent Finland's interests well. But she seemed to tire in the campaign's late going as Mr. Ahtisaari improved his performance in tele-vised debates and public perfor-

Somalia Pullout: Envoys, Too? Marines Warn of Risks if Diplomats Stay

By Barton Gellman

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — With U.S. forces counting down to a March 31 withdrawal from Somalia, the Clinton administration is divided over whether to leave a small diplomatic contingent behind in Mogadishu, whose safety Marine Corps officers say they cannot guarantee.

The proposal to keep diplomats there, approved last month by a senior interagency group, comes amid extraordinary efforts to prevent casualties as the 14month humanitarian intervention winds down.

U.S. commanders are so preoccupied with security that they have banned Americans from most roads in Somalia and are transporting them out of the country on a leased Greek cruise ship for fear that transport aircraft would be shot down.

A U.S. Marine survey team concluded after travel-ing to Somalia last month that "violence will rapidly escalate" with the departure of U.S. forces and that a platoon of 50 troops cannot ensure the safety of a diplomatic outpost there.

Major Michael T. Edwards, operations officer for the Marine battalion that protects State Department posts around the world, wrote to Ambassador Richard W. Bogosian that his security platoon's "capability is not sufficient for continuing operations past 31

He predicted that Mr. Bogosian would require emergency evacuation from Mogadishu within 30 to 60 days if he remained after the U.S. pullout.

Though considered alarmist by some military and civilian leaders, the memorandum has received cabinet-level attention. Weighed against the safety risks are strong political and policy motives to leave a diplomatic team in place in the Somali capital. State Department officials con-tend that they would have a valuable role in helping broker a reconciliation among warring clans.

Other officials say the withdrawal of diplomats would make a mockery of President Bill Clinton's assertions that the United States is leaving Somalia because its work in restoring security is largely done.

All participants in the debate agree that with only a platoon of troops, even the highly trained Marines of the U.S. Navy's Fleet Anti-Terrorism Security Team could be quickly overpowered if Mohammed Farrah Aidid or other warlords wanted to do so.

The disagreement is over the likelihood of a major threat and the ability of remaining United Nations troops to protect against it.

Those discounting the threat point out that the United States has recently agreed to provide tanks, Cobra helicopter gunships and armored troop carriers to the contingents from developing countries that are scheduled to remain in the 20,000-strong UN force.

UN Scales Down Mission

Julia Preston of The Washington Post reported from the United Nations in New York:

The Security Council has given UN peacekeepers in Somalia a new, limited mission that will substantially reduce UN operations there after U.S. troops pull out. In issuing a mandate for the UN force in Somalia to run through March 1995, the Council retreated from aggressive, sometimes combative peacemaking operations is has tried in the three tries. tions it has tried in the three years under Secretary-General Butros Butros Ghali.

The decision signaled a return to the more cautious, neutral role the organization traditionally had played. Under the new mandate, peacekeepers will aim mainly to protect humanitarian aid deliveries outside the capital, Mogadishu. UN troops also will no longer forcibly disarm feuding Somali factions.

The decision on Friday to stress intra-Somali peacemaking and to avoid further efforts to impose peace showed that most of the nations with troops in Somalia were dismayed and exhausted by the UN confrontation with General Aidid and wanted a less controversial stance for the peacekeepers.

These included accounting for political prisoners, allowing them to be visited by the International Committee of the Red Cross, and ending the use of prison labor for exports to the United States.

So far, American officials say, the Chinese have not done enough, creating the prospect that the administration might actually have to withdraw Chung strade henefits.

ARIS - The surprise beneficiaries from the rise in U.S. interest rates are expected to be the so-called peripheral bond markets in Europe. Andres Drobny at CS First-Boston in London thinks Italy, Spain and Sweden will exploit the weakness of the Deutsche mark to dramatically reduce their interest rates without endangering their currencies.

Yields on 10-year government bonds of 8.7 percent in Italy, 7.9 percent in Spain and 6.75 percent in Sweden are the highest in the industrial world. Not only is the income high, but these markets also offer potentially greater capital gains than anywhere else; that is because yields should The Fed's move

Henrik Melph at IBI International in London said he expected the spread of 100 basis points between 10-year yields on Swedish and German debt to narrow to around 30 basis points by year-end. He also predicted the krona would appreciate against the mark.

Given the prospect of a long period of uncertainty in the U.S. market and the vision of high income plus possible capital gains plus protection against mark weakness, analysts at J. P. Morgan & Co. and Salomon Brothers Inc. predicted American bond investors would follow the lead of U.S. equity investors and diversify into Europe.

U.S. investors in fixed-income securities have lagged in diversitying internationally, these analysts said, largely because the domesti market has provided such easy profits until now. Both groups of analysts said they considered the move was potentially large enough that, if unhedged, it could keep a lid on the dollar's rise.

At present, however, bond investors appear cautious about new commitments. The only real enthusiasm is for short-term dollars, preferably floating-rate notes that provide protection against rising rates, and high-quality short-dated paper such as the two-year notes issued last week by General Electric Capital Corp. It was priced to yield a scant 2 basis points over U.S. government paper.

Merrill Lynch & Co. is to this week begin marketing a global bond for Turkey, which will be seeking up to $750 million for between five and 10 years.

U.S. Shines in European TV

Forget Culture, Think Money, Expertise, Distribution

By Richard W. Stevenson New York Times Service

PARIS - It is a busy day at Hamster Productions, one of France's most successful relevision programming makers. Pierre Grimblat, the president, is putting the final touches on the musical score for "L'Amour Est un Jeu d'Enfants," a movie for Canal Plus, the French pay-television service.

Production is about to begin on an installment of "Navarro," a long-running police series that is among the top-rated shows on TF1, the biggest French station. "We are story makers and story tellers," said Mr. Grimblat, evoking traditions France has fought to defend against what it views as American cultural imperialism.

Yet Hamster is one-third owned by Capital Cities/ABC Inc., the parent of the ABC television network and one of the largest American media companies. Capital Cities/ABC does not interfere with Hamster's creative decisions, but the companies work closely in almost every other way, from exchanging scripts to hunting for acquisitions.

"There is no day when we don't say, What would ABC have done?" Mr. Grimblat said. They are so modern and so knowledgeable about the international destiny of television.

France may have won a great victory in the world trade talks late last year by heading off U.S. demands for the European Union to drop its quotas and subsidies and throw open its markets for movies and television programs. But Europeans are just recognizing the scale of a quieter but more far-reaching American invasion, one that has seen companies from the United States infiltrate nearly every corner of the European television business.

As far as television goes, the GATT negotiations may have missed the point. No longer does the U.S. entertainment industry view Europe simply as from Time Warner Inc. to Turner Broadcasting System Inc., Tele-Communications Inc., Viacom Inc., Walt Disney Co., Cox Cable Communications, US West Inc., General Electric Co.'s NBC. Capital Cities and others are rushing to invest in the fastgrowing European television industry.

In European broadcasting, American media ex-ecutives see a business that is being transformed rapidly by its evolution from an era of state ownership to an age of commercial television and everincreasing viewing choices.

They see a huge need for money, for technical expertise and for programming — all of which U.S. companies can provide. And they see a huge market — 350 million people in the 12 major West European nations, and 650 million overall west of Russia.

In most cases, American investments have been made through joint ventures with eager European partners and in full compliance with limits on foreign ownership.

But there is no doubt that U.S. companies are playing an increasingly influential and potentially sensitive role in Europe by virtue of owning all or part of the pipelines through which programming s delivered, as well as by having a hand in making the programming itself.

The possibility that dominance of distribution networks by Americans will ultimately squeeze out domestic programming has created an environ-ment in which a backlash seems increasingly possi-

Coalition Near Deal In Tokyo

Hosokawa Faces Summit in U.S.

TOKYO - Leaders of Japan's eight-party ruling coalition appeared on Sunday to have agreed to reach a compromise economic stimulus package by Monday that would enable Prime Minister Mori-hiro Hosokawa to go to Washing-ton for crucial trade talks with a reflationary, tax-cutting package.

Kyodo news agency said the commitment followed a warning from Akira Yamagishi, head of the Rengo labor union grouping, that the "endangered Japanese econo-my could sustain lethal damage" if the tax situation were left undecided for long.

The coalition has been shaken by three days of political turmoil since Mr. Hosokawa's annnouncement Thursday of a new 7 percent valueadded tax to finance huge income tax cuts.

The prime minister unveiled his so-called "welfare tax," intended to be levied from 1997 on all goods and services, without consulting some of his chief allies. His largest partner, the Social Democratic Party, threatened to walk out, effectively stripping him of a governing majority. Mr. Hosokawa later agreed to set the proposal aside.

Coalition party chiefs went to work to hammer out a compromise that would rescue the sumulus measures and ensure that Japan is not humiliated when Mr. Hosokawa meets President Bill Clinton at Friday's summit meeting.

He needs to be able to show Mr. Clinton the package and a draft budget for the fiscal year beginning in April to prove Japan's willingness to meet U.S. demands for it to boost spending, encourage more imports and help slash its huge gineering company and New World, a leading Hong Kong prop-erty and hotel conglomerate, each hold 50 percent of Sino-French, trade surplus.

Tomiichi Murayama, the Socialist chairman, and other alliance leaders said they would urge Mr. Hosokawa to go ahead and include planned direct tax cuts in the antirecession package he must announce by mid-week.

Bringing It Home To Buy a House Money From Hong Kong

Boosts Real Estate Prices Bombay speculators are counting on at least one group of inves-tors weighing the future prospects of India against China to drive the local real estate market to still greater heights. With wide economic reform under way and full convertability of the rupee likely within two years, investment flows from expatriate Indians scattered around the world are expected to gain strength.

Any difficulties for Hong Kong's Indian business community could hasten the process. Many people of Indian descent who live in Hong Kong approach its 1997 return to Chinese rule with trepidaariy as some could find themselves stateless if forced to leave the British colony. As such, news that Indian investors based in Hong Kong were behind a recent record price for a plot of land — nearly double analysts' predictions — has set the Bombay property market alight.

The sale "has upset all calculations of developers here and opened unlimited possibilities of the market going haywire," the Sunday Times of India reported.

Bombay's real estate prices have always been much higher than Bombay's real estate prices have always been much ingher than most foreigners would expect, but deals in recent months are taking prime residential prices to Tokyo and Hong Kong levels.

New apartments being built by the National Center for the Performing Arts to the specifications demanded by Indians who have lived abroad recently brought about 21,000 rupees (about $700) per square foot. There is talk they could hit 35,000 rupees, keeping up with rapid escalations elsewhere in the crowded city "I bought my place less than two years ago for 14 lakh (1.4 million rapees)," said Ashok Agarwal, general manager of Buena Vista Television (India) Ltd. "I could sell it today for 45 lakh. But what good is the money to me with prices going higher?"

How to Drive Them to Soft Drink? Despite a difficult history in India, global soft-drink makers still have a thirst for deal-making and expansion.

Coca-Cola Co., back in India after a 16-year exile imposed because it refused to reveal its secret drink formula or divest 60 percent of the company, recently paid $60 million for Parle Exports Ltd., the makers of Thumbs Up cola and other drinks.

Now, according to several reports, at least four multinational beverage manufacturers are wooing Duke's, which controls major sections of Bombay's market.

Some simple arithmetic explains the scramble. In the United States, an average person consumes 265 servings of soft drinks annually; the world average is 80. In India, where more than 250 million people have been identified as middle class, the average is three cans or bottles per person a year.

Negotiating With the New Raj

Feb. 4

Living down the saying "India has potential; India will always have potential," is partially in the hands of the Bombay Club, a group of powerful business executives who first gathered in Septemher in the Belvedere Room at the Oberoi Hotel

Indian commerce welcomed the end of the "license raj," the permission system centered in New Delhi that interfered with nearly every aspect of business management. Executives also have savored the prospect of tax reductions, a fully convertible rupee and the chance to invest in the strongest of state-owned businesses due for privatiza-

But a loss of protection from foreign competition and capital has stirred some of the country's most powerful businessmen into action as India begins to ignore self-reliance in favor of global competition. Arguing for a "level playing field," a group led by a scooter maker, Rahul Bejaj, and an office equipment manufacturer, B.K. Modi, is hobbying for more time and greater means to prepare for a new era of competition in a largely closed market of 900 million people.

"They don't want protection, but foreign investors should not find it easier than they do," said K.K. Modi, elder brother of B.K. Modi, who heads the robacco, tea and television divisions of the sprawling family company.

Local businessmen want changes to capital gains taxes that now favor international investors, regulations that cap foreigners' holdings in businesses and a slower pace of opening to direct investment.

Chile CEO Forced Out In Copper Scandal

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche SANTIAGO - The chief executive of the world's biggest copper producer, the state-run Chile Copper Corp., resigned on Saturday as the result of a scandal over $206 million in losses on futures trading. On Friday night, Alejandro Noemi, the chief of the company. released a preliminary internal audit that blamed senior managers for allowing Codelco's chief trader to run up the losses.

On Saturday, the government said that President Patricio Aylwin had accepted Mr. Noemi's resignation and had appointed the deputy economy minister, Jorge Rodriguez, to replace him. Mr. Aylwin has ordered a judicial inquiry into the case. The losses were accumulated by man Pablo Davila, the chief trader, who has resigned since the scandal broke, Mr. Davila told his superiors two weeks ago that the losses had begun when he confused a buy and a sell order. To cover up, he said, he began speculating in futures con-tracts on international metals markets, and made 5,000 trades between last September and January.

But the losses grew. Mr. Noemi said on Friday night that Mr. Davila had run up losses of $164 million in copper contracts, $31 million in silver contracts and $12 million in gold trades.

In addition, Mr. Noemi said, Codelco was responsible for open futures contracts that would represent a loss of $100 million if they were closed out at current prices.

Mr. Noemi had consistently demed the losses were a result of fraud. But on Friday night, he said nothing could be ruled out. "Every day I am considering a new viewpoint," he said.

The preliminary audit said Mr. Davila had exceeded limits on his trading that allowed him to expose the company to losses of up to $1 million. The audit further said there had been a lack of supervision by his superiors and by Codelco's finance department.

Codelco's head of sales, Owen Guerrini, and his deputy, Carlos Depsch, have resigned as well. Mr. Noemi said Codelco's board was never informed of a change in policy in October 1990, when Mr. Noemi authorized Codelco to act as a trader for the first time, speculating by buying and selling futures not backed up by the company's own production.

Tightening Will Flatten the Curve rates since February 1989 will benefit long-term interest rates and help narrow the spread between short and long rates, analysis said.

The Federal Reserve Board chairman, Alan Greenspan, announced Friday a slight increase in short-term interest rates at the conclusion of the Federal Open Market Committee's discussion of monetary policy. The Fed's new target for the federal funds rate, the rate at which hanks lend each other money overnight, is 3.25 percent, 25 basis points up from the 3 percent that had been the target since Sept. 4, 1992. The Fed's move "will ultimately benefit the long end and flatten the yield curve," said Robert Bannon, who watches the central bank for the consulting firm IDEA.

The idea is that the Fed's vigilance about the potential for inflation in the future will reassure investors in longer-term U.S. Treasury securities. These investors normally demand a yield premium for holding paper with maturities 10 or 30 years out. Inflation erodes the value of any fixed-income security.

interest rates at the Federal Open Market Committee meeting on Dec. 21.

The FOMC left that move for last week's meeting.

Minutes of the December meeting were released on Friday after the normal six-week delay. They showed that two of the Fed governors, Wayne Angell and Lawrence Lindsey, voted against the neutral Fed stance at the meeting. They were protesting what they felt was a sluggishness by the central bank in heading off potential inflationary pressures.

"They believed that momentary policy was overly accommodative and

They believed that monetary policy was overly accommodative and needed to be adjusted promptly, minutes of the Dec. 21 meeting said. Mr. Angell's views finally prevailed last week, an ironic development because he is leaving the Federal Reserve Board this week and did not attend the latest meeting.

The Fed policymakers laid the groundwork for Friday's interest rate increase in December, saying that when they pushed up rates, they should make their move at an FOMC meeting, not between meetings, for fear of upsetting financial markets in thin year-end trading.

Indeed, shorter-term U.S. Treayield spread between the two-year spread, which widens in response to fears of inflation, was 213 points just a week earlier.

The last time the spread brushed the 190-point mark was in October, at the height of the long bond rally.

The 2-year note fell 2 12/32

Thursday and 4.10 a week earlier, the highest since January 1993.

"The tightening is going to be relatively good for the long end and people are putting in flattening trades." said Jaz Singh, vice presi-dent at Sanwa-BGK Securities. He said the tightening "cannot be just a psychological move," but the start of a new tightening cycle.

"It's not 25 basis points that will make a difference." he said. "The long end had been expecting a tightening and it's reassuring not to have to deal with uncertainty.

Investors in longer Treasury securities had been growing con-cerned that the Fed might remain too accommodative too long and let inflationary pressure build up as the U.S. economy picks up steam. This uncertainty had played a role in the performance of the long end since November, as a year-long rally ran out of gas.

"I think it would have been disturbing for the long end if the Fed had not done anything," said Marc Wanshel, vice president and economist at J. P. Morgan Securities.

"There is some initial reaction in which the entire market is going to be hurt," he acknowledged. "But in the sense that the market is confident that the Fed is ahead, this will benefit the flattening of the curve."

The quarter-point increase in rates by the Federal Reserve Board on Friday can only feed fears that the pace of Bundesbank casing will be slowed. A slowdown in the pace of German rate cuts would cloud prospects of economic recovery that are forecast for this year. The obvious beneficiary from all this is the dollar, which advanced sharply Friday.

The dollar beaefits from an uplow-paying alternatives. tick in short-term interest rates because this narrows the gap against German levels. That gap still remains wide — about 200 basis points — and that is expected to restrain the dollar's advance. The dollar did sarge on Friday, closing at 1.7610 DM. But Mr. Crane said this simply "puts a floor underneath the dollar, h's now unlikely to weaken substantially, but it's not about to move rampantly

Paul Chertkow, London-based analyst at Union Bank of Switzerland and a long-time dollar optimist, said the currency will quickly move up to the 1.80 DM level, but will take some time to get beyoud that."

The timing of the expected cuts in German rates is now the big question. The Bundesbank failed to cut rates last week, as many had hoped, because of over-target growth in the money supply. The Bundesbank cited extraordinary reasons for the spurt in December's data, but analysts fear the distortion will also foul the January data.

In fact, Mr. Yardeni said, with money-market interest rates at about 3 percent, "dividend yield is bullish, not bearish" for stocks.] Although Friday's loss on Wall Street was the worst since Nov. 15, 1991, when the Dow fell 120 points, advisers said investors ought to keep the dive in perspective: The 1991 plunge was 3.9 percent, and this one was only 2.4 percent be-

China Caps Stock Issues World Stocks in Review At Last Year's Level

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches drive to cool the economy, has capped expansion of its stock markets at 1993 levels, the official People's Daily reported Sunday.

The State Council Securities Policy Committee has set a quota of 5.5 billion yuan ($632.1 million) of new issues to domestic investors this year, the same as last year's quota, the paper said. That means another year of cautious growth following a flood of 13 billion yuan in listings in 1992.

"This year, new stocks will be released at a suitable time, taking into account the capacity of the market and the speed of its expan-sion." the paper quoted Ma Zhongzhi, the committee's deputy director, as telling a national meet-

Honda Warns of Pullout From Rover

LONDON (Renters) - Honda Motor Co. may pull out of Rover Group if Rover loses its British stains as a result of control by Bayerische Motoren Werke AG, Honda's chief executive said Sunday.

The executive, Nobuhiko Kawamoto, said on television that if Rover becomes only a joint venture with BMW, and Rover thereby ceases to be a British company, our cooperative relationship with Rover will not last long."

Honda has 20 percent of the car operations of Rover, which was sold by British Aerospace PLC to BMW for £800 million ($1.2 billion) last week.

BMW's chairman, Bernd Pischetsrieder, asked what it would mean if Honda walked away, replied: "I think it would mean for Honda as well as for Rover tremendous losses and I think it would be irresponsible to accept this." But he said BMW wanted Honda to stay and added, "I would obviously assure them as well that we will respect their interests."

GM Has Little Profit to Share in U.S.

CHICAGO (Reuters) - Jack Smith, chief executive of General Motors Corp., has said that most of the company's U.S. workers will not receive profit sharing checks this year because GM's core North American operations did not recover sufficiently in 1993.

"I don't want anyone declaring that we're all fixed. We still have work to do." he said on Saturday at the Chicago Auto Show, Analysts estimate GM's North American auto operations had a loss of more than $1 billion last year, after interest, taxes and special items. That was an improvement from a loss of $4.5 billion in 1992.

Malawi to Ease Exchange Controls

BLANTYRE, Malawi (AFP) — Malawi will dramatically ease exchange controls on Monday to stimulate growth and exports, Francis Pereka Moyo, governor of the central bank, has said.

Importers will no longer have to apply to the central bank for foreign exchange approval, Mr. Moyo said, while regular exporters will be allowed to open foreign-currency denominated accounts with the bank.

Claims Mount in Omni Bankruptcy

ZURICH (Renters) — Atag Ernst & Young, administrator of the bankrupt Omni Holding AG, says creditors have filed claims exceeding 3.02 billion Swiss frams ($2.08 billion) against the fugitive Swiss financier, Werner Rey, according to media reports.

In a letter to creditors, the accounting firm said claims of 519 million francs had been rejected, while claims totaling 1.66 billion were put on hold due to insufficient information. Claims of $42 million francs against Mr. Rey have been accepted.

The former head of Omni is wanted for fraud and forgery.

Norman, Recovered. Wins by 1

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches PHUKET, Thailand (AP) Australia's Greg Norman, too sick to even lift a club the day before competition began, won the Johnnie Walker Classic golf tournament Sanday, beating Fred Couples by one stroke.

Norman, who said he picked up a long infection while playing in the Dubai Classic last month, shot a course record 8-under-par 64 in the third round and carded 68 on Sunday over the 7,049-yard, par-72 Blue Canyon Country Club course

"Beware of a sick golfer," Nor-

By edging Couples — who held or shared the lead for the first three rounds -- Norman also moved up from No. 2 to take over Nick Faldo's position as the world's No. 1 golfer in the Sony rankings. Faldo, from South Africa, failed to make the cut Friday at the halfway point.

Couples shot 70 Sunday for a four-day total of 278. Bernhard Langer also shot 70 and finished third, two strokes behind Norman. Ian Woosnam, tied with Couples for the lead after three rounds, shot 73 to take fourth at 281.

Norman said his future plans inchided more play in Europe. "I would like to play the Scottish Open because I have not played there," he said. "I am going to play five tournaments in Europe, 18 in the States and one in Japan." In Pebble Beach, California, the script has read like something out of Ponce de Leon's travel diary. You want the fountain of youth? Find 17-Mile Drive in Carmel and take the winding road up to The Lodge at Pebble Beach.

First it was Arnold Palmer, 64, charging into the picture on Thursday with a 69 and then it was Tom Watson, 44, shooting the lights out on Friday, and on Saturday it was Johnny Miller, 46, rediscovering his game and shooting a 67 that put him just one stroke out of the lead going into the final round of the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-

The first sellout of the season at the Joyce Athletic and Convocation Center saw the Fighting Irish (7-13) win for only the second time in eight games. The Bruins (15-2), fell from the No. 1 ranking with a loss at California last week.

The last time the Bruins came to South Bend, they were 21-2 and ranked No. 2, but lost to Notre Dame 84-71 on Feb. 22, 1992, And in one of the biggest upsets in NCAA history, the Irish beat No. 1 UCLA 71-70 on Jan. 19, 1974, to end the Brains' record 88-game winning streak.

"It wasn't the building," said UCLA coach Jim Harrick. "They just played good and we didn't. We were on our heels all day." The Irish used a tenacious manto-man defense that wiped out the Bruins' flashy running game and when Jeremy H held them to their lowest point to jumper at 10:13. tal of the season. Forced to fire away from long range most of the second half, UCLA was 0-of-16 after a slow start and Connecticut from 3-point range for the game.

nine-game losing streak and a 12game skid in the league. Arizona (17-4, 6-3) had a four-game winning streak broken.

No. 13 Michigan 59, Michigan St. 51: In East Lansing, Michigan, Juwan Howard had 18 points and 12 rebounds to lead undermanned

Michigan to a victory.
The win helped Michigan (15-4, 7-2 Big Ten) stay in a first-place tie with Indiana. Michigan State fell to 14-8, 5-5, following its worst offensive performance of the season.

No. 14 Indiana 76, Penn St. 66: Pat Graham scored 21 points and stopped a critical Penn State fast break when he lost a contact lens, giving Indiana the victory in State College, Pennsylvania.

Officials stopped play for Graham with 3:52 left, interrupting a Penn State five-on-four drive that could have cut Indiana's lead to two. After Graham was set, Indiana (14-4, 7-2 in the Big Ten) forced a turnover and the Lions (10-8, 3-6) never came close again.

No. 15 Syracuse 80, Pittsburgh 77: Adrian Autry scored 26 points, including five baskets that halted Pittsburgh runs as Syracuse gained its 10th win in its last 15 road

John Wallace added 23 points for the Orangemen (15-3, 8-3 Big East), who pushed Pitt (13-6, 7-4) into third place in the conference.

Ohio State 73, No. 16 Wisconsin 57: Lawrence Funderburke and Tony Watson led a 13-0 run to end the first half, then scored the first six points in a 12-2 second-half surge as Ohio State, playing at home, scored an upset.

Derek Anderson led Ohio State

10-10, 3-6 Big Ten) with 17 points and five assists, while Watson had 16, Funderburke 15 and Greg Simpson 12 Michael Finley scored 18 and Tracy Webster 14 for Wisconsin (14-4, 5-4).

No. 17 Alabama-Birmingham 83, No. 25 Cincinnati 67: Robert Shannon scored 21 points and Alabama-Birmingham, playing at home, improved its shooting to win.
UAB (17-3, 5-2 Great Midwest

Conference) had shot only 37 percent in its last five games. But the Blazers made 52 percent overall in beating the Bearcats (15-6, 3-3).

No. 19 California 81, Oregon 61: In Eugene, Oregon, Jason Kidd scored 11 points in a decisive 23-4 second-half surge to lead Califor-

No. 20 Missouri 104, Oklahoma 94: Jevon Crudup had 25 points and 15 rebounds, and Mark Atkins ruined Oklahoma with his 3-point shooting as Missouri remained un-beaten in the Big Eight.

Missouri (16-2, 7-0) overcame a seven-point second-half deficit to win its fourth straight conference road game. Oklahoma (12-6, 3-3) hung in against the Tigers despite just six points from Jeff Webster. who came in leading the league in scoring with 24.4 points per game.

Georgia Tech 83, No. 21 Maryiand 71: James Forrest made two straight layups in a late 9-0 run that helped Georgia Tech, playing on the road, to snap a three-game los-

Georgia Tech (12-8, 3-6 Atlantic Coast Conference) never trailed, making its first seven shots to take a 16-5 lead. The Yellow Jackets led by 10 at halftime but allowed Maryland (12-6, 5-4) to tie the score on a jumper by Joe Smith with four minutes left.

No. 22 Minnesota 79, Northwestern 65: Townsend Orr scored 11 of his 14 points during a game-breaking run as Minnesota, playing at home, to snap a three-game Big Ten losing streak.

Randy Carter had 18 points and Arriel McDonald added 16 for Minnesota (15-7, 5-4), which shot 50 percent from the field and tied a season-low with eight turnovers. Northwestern (9-8, 0-8) lost its eighth straight conference game.

Utala St. 69, No. 23 New Mexico St. 68: Freshman Jarobi Kemp scored 14 points and Corwin Woodard added 13, leading Utah State, playing at home, to an upset. It was the second straight loss for New Mexico State (16-3, 8-2). Utah

State (8-11, 5-6) hit 19 straight free throws in the second half. No. 24 Florida 84, Mississippi

State 75: In Gainesville, Florida, Dan Cross scored 26 and hit a 3pointer for Florida. Cross' 3-point shot with 1:06 gave the Gators an 80-75 lead. Florida (18-3, 8-1) remained in first place in the Eastern Division of the Southeastern Conference. Mississippi State (13-5, 6-3) led 46-41 at halftime, but Florida went on a 10-2 run to start the second half.

Indurain to Skip Tour of Spain, Use Giro as Tuneup to France

MADRID — Top Spanish rider Miguel Indurain will skip the Tour of Spain for the third year running in order to concentrate on the Giro d'Italia as a build-up for the Tour de France, the coach of the Banesto cycling team has said.

Indurain's decision casts a cloud of uncertainty over the prestigious team's participation in the Tour of Spain, with the race organizers having hinted that if the three-time Tour de France winner does not ride, the team will be excluded. "The Giro is not Indurain's aim," said Banesto's coach, Jose Miguel Echavarri. "His entire season turns on the Tour' in France. We would never put a possible victory in the French race at risk," Echavarri added, explaining that if Indurain took part in the Tour of Spain in April, he would peak too soon to be able to maintain his top form for the Tour de France.

 Joachim Hahrpezok, 27, Poland's former cycling world champion, has died of heart failure while warming up for a soccer match, the PAP news agency reported Sunday. He won the amateur road race title at the world cycling championships in Chambery, France, in 1989.

Tomba Grades Out at AA In Last Pre-Olympic Test

Compiled by Our Staff From Disputches GARMISCH-PARTENKIR-

CHEN, Germany - Alberto Tomba, getting better as the Winter Olympics get closer, won the last slalom before the Lillehammer Games by more than a second Sunday ahead of Tomas Fogdoe. The Italian, who led Fogdoe by

0.72 seconds after the first run, produced the third-fastest second run on the Gudiberg course to win the eighth slalom of the season and post his second victory in a row. Tomba, who won the Jan. 30 slalom in Chamonix, France, was the only skier to break 46 seconds in the 58-gate first run, clocking 45.95. He posted a time of 46.52 in the 62-gate second heat for a winning aggregate of I minute, 32.47 There are still 20 days to go before the Olympic slalom and I hope I can stay in form," Tomba said. "I will keep on training hard and hope for the best."

Tomba's fourth slalom victory of behind Ingemar Stenmark's 40. His 33 career World Cap vic-tories make Tomba the fourth most successful World Cup skier. Stenmark has 86. The 100 points Tomba picked for his victory moved him to sec-ond place overall in World Cup standings, and extended his lead in slalom standings. Fogoe, the Swedish slalom World Cup champion last season, who also finished second to Tomba in Chamonix, posted a time of 1:33.58, 1.11 seconds back.

Jure Kosir of Slovenia, fourth after the first run, moved up one place to finish third in 1:34.21 after breaking a ski tip on the first run. Peter Roth of Germany, who had the fastest second run, jumped from 10th to fourth, while his teammate, Arming Bittner, was fifth. Thomas Stangassinger of Austria, third after the first run, dropped to ninth. Tomba, 27, is the only Alpine skier to win consecutive Olympic gold medals in the same event, the giant slalom in 1988 and 1992. He also won the slalom title in 1988. Tomba fell after crossing the finish line, bringing down a makeshift fence and ending up on his back in a crowd of jubilant supporters. He was mobbed by several female fans but was not injured. "I was scared for a moment because I have just recovered from an injury," said Tomba, who won in Chamonix despite nursing an injured shoulder. With his performance the last

Bidders for 2002 Games To Be Reduced to 2 or 3

The Associated Press

LILLEHAMMER, Norway International Olympic Committee officials have agreed to cut the number of candidates bidding for the 2002 Winter Olympics to a group of two or three finalists. A record 10 cities have submitted bids for the Games. With the vote set for June 1995, the IOC's executive board decided Saturday that the bidding and selection process would be too costly.

There are too many candidates, said the IOC's director general, François Carrard. On one hand, it's positive for the Olympic movement. But on the other hand. it's extremely difficult to have 10 candidate cities, with the expenses and the load of work that will be

Carrard said the executive boardapproved a plan to select two or three finalists by mid-January of next year. They will be chosen by a special panel consisting of mem-bers of the executive board, one representative each of the internstional federations and national Olympic committees, and the chairman of the IOC evaluation

The final selection will be made as usual by the full IOC. Any members of the executive board who come from the bidding countries will be ineligible to take part in the pre-selection process. The group would try to reach a consensus based on an objective assessment to select the finalists," Carrard said. "If not, there would have to be a vote."

The proposal goes to the IOC session next week for final approval, which is considered a formality. The change was instituted only for the 2002 vote but could serve as a basis for future bidding selections. Carrard said.

The move is aimed at reducing the costs and travel involved in the bidding and selection process. Under the current system, cities spend millions of dollars promoting their bids while IOC members travel around the world at large expense to visit the candidate cities. STOCKHOLM (AP) — Linemates Petr Firex and Richard Zennicks combined for six points as the Czech Republic beat Canada, 5-1, Sunday to win the pre-Olympic Sweden Hockey Games with a 3-0 record. It was the first victory by the Czechs in the annual tournament and established them as one of the favorities for the gold in the Olympic tournament starting next week in Lillehammer, Norway.

Canada finished second while defending champion Sweden, which edged Russia, 3-2, on a late goal by Peter Forsberg, was third. All three teams finished with 1-2 records.

A similar leap of imagination seems intended in his latest novel, "Brazil," set in a mythi-cal version of South America. The result this time, however, is a decidedly unhappy one. Couched as a retelling of the Tristan and Iscult legend, "Brazil" begins as an arch fairy tale and ends as a modern-day soap opera full of racial and sexual cliches. It does for racial understanding what Updike's bitter por-traits of women in "The Witches of Eastwick" and "S" did for commu-

In Updike's telling, Tristan is Tristão, a 19-year-old black street
kid, who believes in the magical workings of fate. Iscult is Isabel, a spoiled upper-class white girl, who rebels against her family's code of privilege. The two tecnagers meet on the beach in Rio during the 1960s and instantly fall in love.

In typical Romeo and Juliet fashion, their families denounce the romance. Isabel's wealthy uncle declares the affair beyond the bounds even of our permissive age, in this all-too-progressive society."
Tristão's mother, a prostitute who has borne numerous illegitimate children, also rebuffs Isabel's efforts to befriend her. Their respective worlds — Isabel's world of money and ease. Tristão's world of poverty and despair - are mechanically contrasted and compared. When the lovers try to start a new life on their own, they are pursued by thugs hired by Isabel's father. Fearful that Tristão will be killed, Isabel appears to releat: She bids her lover goodbye and enrolls in college.

WASHINGTON — Toward the end of "Meet the Press," where I occasionally come on to shoot the wounded, we were discussing Whitewatergate. David Broder of The Washington Post took issue with my suspicious of heavy financial scandal ahead. "If you told me that Bill Clinton was very horny or very ambitious," Broder opined over the NBC network, "I would have no trouble believing it. If you told me that he was money-hungry and was cutting corners for money, I'd say that doesn't sound like the Bill Clinton

When the show ended, the Pulitzer Prize winns reporter and columnist looked around and innocently asked: "Can you use a word like horny on television?" The only answer was yes, because he already had. But has horny crossed the line from slang to colloquialism, from mild vulgarity to acceptable informal usage?

First, to the roots. Horn can be traced to the Latin cornu. The proto-Germanic harna bloomed in Old English in "Beowulf," around the year 725. The original meaning referred to the hard protuberances growing from the head of ungulate mammals or mythgrowing from the thesatyr, a bestial being combining a goat (indeservedly vilified as a lecterous beast) and a human. The poet James Russell Lowell, extolling the virtues of hard work, wrote in 1843: "Blessed are the horny hands of toil!" Hard-working fishermen today prize as bait the North American hornyhead chub.

Now to the point. A horn is hard; it is shaft-shaped; since the 15th century, it has been used as a symbol for the male's erect sex organ. "No horn could be stiffer,"
John Cleland wrote in "Fanny Hill" in 1749; earlier, Shakespeare used the term horn-mad in "Much Ado About Nothing" and other plays to mean both "lecher-ous" and "cuckolded." The nose "horn" of the rhinoceros has long been believed to possess aphrodisiac qualities, which led to the endangement of the species.
"Hornie is an 18th-century Scottish term for 'dev-reports Alan Richter, author of the 1993 Dictionary of Sexual Slang, "which itself is another old term for penis, dating back to Boccaccio. Robert Burns refers to add hornie, meaning the devil, and old horny is also a 19th-century term for penis. But plain old is also a 19th-century term for peans. But plant out hormy, meaning 'sexually aroused,' only makes its debut at the end of the 19th century, originally applied exclusively to males." Henry Miller, in his 1949 "Sexus," turned it into an equal-opportunity word with "Her thick, gargling voice saying [rannely bit deletted]. "In heavy." deleted] Tm horny.

That brings us to today: Do we use horny in everyday speech, along with its Scottish synonym randy, to mean "sexually aroused"? Yes; it's common usage, and it has lost much of its taboo.

Next question: Should we use the term in family newspapers or on television talk shows? In my opinion. no: common usage is not necessarily good usage, and horny has not lost all its taboo. My colleague Broder caught himself, and asked about it. What is natural in dramatic dialogue can be jarring in more formal discourse.

Instead of "if you told me he was horny," try "if you told me he played around a lot." (In formal newspaper writing, of course, you could not use play around, except in a quotation; you would have to use terms like promiscuous or the fuzzier, less judgmental sexualby active, or, if referring to a specific state, security

Relatedly, the word penis appeared a few paragraphs back, and it did not bother you. That standard English word has been thrust into everyday speech by the trials of John and Lorens Bobbitt. "Her crime," the New York Times editorialist wrote, "serves as permission to say a bald anatomical word in newscasts that Howard Stern only recently appropriated for talk radio." The writer didn't need to use the word, but pents was used in the paper 12 times in the opening weeks of the year, compared with no uses in the same period last year. П

Once more unto the breach, dear friends: Because I Once more unto the breach, dear thends: hocaine i camot be sure that this piece separating horaness from godliness is going to make it through the shrieks, growns, hoc-boys, and tin-tuis that are part of "the editing process," I might as well go all the way. Here comes more than you need to know about the part of the body that during novelists used to refer to as "his manked."

The word penis, according to the Barnhart Diogonary of Etymology, is from the Latin penis for "fail" and is cognate with the Greek peas and Sanskrit penas, from the indo-European pes-/pas-. from the Indo-European pes-/pas-Penis surfaced two years ago in our fiving rooms in the Clarence Thomas hearings during Anna Hill's testi-mony, which also necessitated exhaustive etymological research into the slang synonym dong in this space. The word penis resurfaced in Michael Jackson's videotape ment defending himself from charges of child molestation, and became part of life's daily language in the avid coverage of Lorena Bobbin's trial. Don't blame the messenger, the clear, standard, direct way of describing what happened was "she cut off his penis"; only on second reference could it be "an act of sexual mutilation? or "her attempt to remove his manhood."

We have come a long way in a short time, thanks to television, in removing a sense of shame in using the right word. Time was, a few courageous parents would eschew all baby-talk terms and accurately identify the part to their children, only to blush furiously when their kids freely used the "clinical" word to other adults.

We've come a ways in journalism, too. In a new book, "My Times," John Corry wrote about a New York Times article on the subject of sex: "It had been decided that my story could remain as it was except for one word. That was penis. Vagina was acceptable, but penis had to be replaced by 'male sex organ.'

The times, they are a-changin'. July 13, 1993, will be remembered as the day the word penis appeared in 30point type in The New York Times.

Standard English has no dirty words. The word mis — severed or reattached, flaccid or erect — is as impocent, and as usable in polite company, as the hornybead chub.

Very Joseph: Totally Cool Shopping

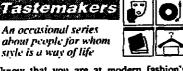

By Suzy Menkes

PARIS — He is known, like a sports hero or a rock star, by his first name: Joseph. The word has even entered the language of style. "Very Joseph" describes to fashion's cognoscenti an airy space, cool in both senses of the word. It will be filled with graphic modern clothes, mostly in black and white like the wardrobe of the impish man himself.

Joseph Ettedgui — to give him the name he inherited from his Moroccan-French parents - came to London 27 years ago, went into hairdressing, offered his clients a few clothes (inevitably in black and white) and from there built an empire of style. You only have to peck into the tiny cafe in the flagship store Joseph opened three months ago on the Avenue Montaigne, to

"It is not at all like that - I want a background of black and white but I love to see red in the middle of it," says Joseph, to refute accusations that his style focus encourages fashion fascism. "I like to mix the sublime and the cheap, to put drill with cashmere. But to do a shop, discipline is very important.

You find the 11 Joseph stores in Paris, London and New York, plus Cannes, in the south of France. The style he pioneered has spread like ectoplasm across the fashion universe — all large plate glass windows revealing neatly folded clothes against matt-gray walls and gleaming

It is hard to separate the reality of Joseph's achievement as tastemaker and style-setter from the myth. He contributes to the legendary accounts of his pursuit of retailing perfection by telling a story about himself: When Donna Karan asked him to lunch in the London store Harvey Nichols (where he designed the cafe) Joseph dedicated the morning to rearranging the stock in his shop, changing the music tapes, freshening up the flowers and "taking away the clothes I didn't think Donna would like," She greeted him by telling him she adored his shop - which she had visited the day before.

Joseph Ettedgui: A fondness for black and white

Joseph's exceptional place in the fashion world comes from keeping one eye on emerging talent and the other on customer needs. The designers he has picked up at their modest beginnings include Kenzo whom he made a fashion star in London in the 1970s — and Azzedine Alaïa, whose talent he nortures with fanatical loyalty. "I love to work with people who give me all the ingredients," says Joseph, who finds it easiest to buy from designers he knows personally. He describes the rare moments of parting company (he recently fell out with Kenzo's organization) as "like a di-
